Any of the corn will do if it is cut at the right stage of growth. Cut when the ears are rather too old for roasting ears, or when glazed and dented some. I would not use the peasing the tobacco barn as you propose would cost more than to build a round stave silo, and then you would have a poorer silo. A square silo will always give trouble from damaged ensilage in the corners, and square silos have height enough for its diameter to make a good silo. I believe that I gave directions for the building of a silo with wooden hoops.
